Eltville is one of the oldest printing sites in the world. The "black art" made its entrance already during the lifetime of Henne Gensfleisch, historically known as Johannes Gutenberg, the inventor of movable type for the printing press. Gutenberg helped the Bechtermünz brothers print a Latin dictionary that was published in Eltville in 1467. He received the only honor of his lifetime in the Electors' Castle in the year 1465 when the title of nobleman was conferred on him by the Elector Adolf of Nassau. During this tour you will search for traces of Gutenberg and will learn interesting facts about his life and work.

If you would like to learn more about the history of Eltville and its roses, you can join us on a tour from the Old Town to the rose beds along the banks of the Rhine and on to the Electors' Castle with its rose garden.
